Mozilla Open Design Blog: A glimpse of what's to come. [3]

Today we're presenting new brand marks for Firefox Monitor and Firefox Lockwise. Lockwise? Yes, that's the official name for the service we'd nicknamed 'Lockbox' during its product development phase. The new icons are meant to signal the functions these apps perform. Firefox Monitor, which helps you discover if your email address has been part of a data breach and can alert you about further breaches, is represented by a magnifying glass. Firefox Lockwise, which provides an easy way to store your Firefox passwords and protect your data, suggests both a lock and a profile. The marks reinforce that all of our Firefox products and services help you keep your personal life private.

Mozilla Addons Blog: Friend of Add-ons: Martin Giger [4]

Our newest Friend of Add-ons is Martin Giger! Martin is a leader and member of the Mozilla Switzerland community, an extension developer, and a frequent contributor to Mozilla's community forums, where he helps people find answers to their questions about extension development. If you have ever visited our forums or joined one of our channels on IRC, there's a good chance you've seen Martin kindly and patiently helping people resolve their issues. (He has also written a great blog post about how to effectively ask for help when you get stuck on a problem.)

Martin began contributing to Mozilla in the early 2010s when he began localizing a Thunderbird extension into German and building his first Firefox extension. He also became involved with the Nightingale Media Player project, an open-source audio player and web browser based on the Mozilla XULRunner.
