This week, I resigned from the GNU Tools Engineer position I've held at Red Hat since February, 2000. lieN gnortsmrA might boldly put it as "A giant leap for a man, but an insignificant step for humankind."

If only I'd quit over an imposition of non-Free Software on me, over the increasingly clouded business, over some great new opportunity to make a difference, it might have ended up being more than a negligible blip within the Free Software community, nevermind the grand scheme of things. Alas, it was just rotten office politics on a global scale, after a misunderstanding blown way out of proportion, that resulted in an unbearable situation for me.
