

A new conceptual model for Fedora

By Rianne Schestowitz

Created 15/10/2021 - 9:58am

Submitted by Rianne Schestowitz on Friday 15th of October 2021 09:58:11 AM Filed under Red Hat [1]

It's no news now that Fedora has a new logo, and what you may not realize is that we do not have a new website? when we began the new logo rollout process, we simply updated the logo in-place on our pre-existing website.

The thing is ? and this is regardless of the underlying code or framework under-girding the website, which I have no issues with ? the messaging and content on the current getfedora.org website has not kept pace with the developments, goals, and general narrative of the Fedora project. We have a lot of different initiatives, developments, and collaborations happening at what I find at times is a dizzying pace that is challenging to keep up with. The number of different fronts that Fedora development takes place on and the low, technical level they occur at makes it difficult to understand the big picture of what exactly Fedora is, and why and how would one want to use it.

[2]

Red Hat

Source URL: <http://www.tuxmachines.org/node/156811>

Links:

[1] <http://www.tuxmachines.org/taxonomy/term/142>

[2] <https://blog.linuxgrrl.com/2021/10/14/a-new-conceptual-model-for-fedora/>